Alliance Visiting Nurse Association and Hospice takes care of one of its own

North Benton resident Kay Bravis spent 23 years of her professional career caring for others when they could no longer care for themselves. It was only when Bravis was diagnosed with small cell cancer that she was forced to retire and look to others to return the favor.

Bravis received her cancer diagnosis in January 2012. She was informed that she was not a candidate for surgery, so the call was made to Alliance Visiting Nurse Association (AVNA) and Hospice in October of that year.

"I worked until I couldn't do it anymore," Bravis said. "I knew that I wanted the same people that I worked alongside for so many years to be there when I needed them."

Bravis had no knowledge of what hospice care was when she first started with Caring Hands Inc., an affiliate service of Alliance Community Hospital, in 1988. Over the years, she became close to the nurses from Alliance Visiting Nurse Association and Hospice as they worked together to care for the com-

"Most people go into a nursing home when they get a diagnosis like mine," Bravis said. "But I knew I wanted to be home around my family. All I want is to pass away in my own bed. I couldn't do it without help from these hospice nurses.

The AVNA and Hospice team provides both medical and spiritual support to its patients. Bravis and her family are especially thankful for the assistance with medications. The family says that they have never asked for something twice and appreciate the constant attention, day or night.

Numerous hospice nurses have cared for Bravis since her diagnosis, but she certainly has a few personal favorites.

"I've known some of my so the friendships mean so much more when they visit or simply call to check in, Bravis said.

Hospice nurse Doria Kisling has nothing but good things to say about Bravis. "Kay really is one of us and is a very special lady that I'm so glad I've gotten to know over

There are numerous military mothers on the hospice staff and they knew how important a milestone like graduation is. "To be able to see the beach with my family was amazing. My grandson is now stationed in North Carolina, but he texts me every day to see how I'm doing," Bravis
